CHAPTER XII—COUNTERPLOTS. "Then, Digby struck in, grasping wildly at a straw of hope. 'I have your word you'll provide I find and rescue Rose.' 'You have my word to that, unquestionably. Bring Rose to me, and I'll gladly shake the dust of New York from my shoes and never return till I see you again comfortably in my grave.' 'It shall be done,' Digby promised. 'I must.' 'You believe that?' 'I've your fortune in my hands. I'll take care to spend it all, if there be you give Rose back to me.' 'In twelve hours, then,' Digby promised, with a show of confidence which he by no means felt.

"You believe that?" "I've your fortune in my hands. I'll take care to spend it all, if there be you give Rose back to me." "In twelve hours, then," Digby promised, with a show of confidence which he by no means felt.

"Will you make a book on it? I'll put you something handsome, and here I'll give you the bargain. If you believe you can carry out your promise, write to my wife stating you have the book available until the morning of the day tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, and make arrangements for a marriage before the next day." "I'll do it," Digby agreed, and if I fail, I'll forfeit the cost of the restoration. But about this marriage—"

"Well, what is to hinder it, provided you provide the bride?" "You'll have to have a license in this State—and you'll have to be married by a minister in person with your bride-tickets. There won't be time."

"Then will you marry in Jersey?" Alan inquired. "Dig up some clergyman over there, if you don't know one yourself." "Oh, I'm well acquainted with the very man."

"Good! Tell him to be prepared to sign a heavy honorarium between 2 and 3 to-morrow morning." "At the moment, give me time to write the necessary checks."

"Add to Alan's very considerable amount, the little man proceeded to compose the telegrams as seriously as if he really believed in his ability to do good by his word."

"When it was evident that only by discovering the whereabouts of Rose and bringing the lovers might he hope to persuade Alan to take himself out of harm's way and highway. At this point he had committed himself to the undertaking, betrayed such headlong anxiety to be off and guiding the marriage, he was controlled for the moment by secret information that his attention to the tale of Alan's fortunes since landing in America was inconspicuously postponed to another and more willing—Chapter Four."

"With the further pledge that Alan would hear from him before dawn, the little man hurried away."

"Not ill-pleased to be left to his own devices, when he proposed that Digby would never have approved had he not so much as suspected them. Alan upon the less deferred action until after midnight."

"In the stormy, empty streets of the residential quarter during the hours of early morning, it would be far easier to detect any dogging shadow than to detect with the thoroughness thoroughness."

"And here at the very first chance (fortune smiled upon him, by sending a casual cruising taxi-cab in front of him) he decided to walk or else to take the first one of the hotel's string (Continued tomorrow.)"

together after biting through the lead of a small portion of the animal in the stomach. It may take more time, but it is certainly an economy to use the toothbrush for all purposes. The toothbrush has its all-important uses, but in order that the teeth may be intelligently brushed, the following are in necessary to give them care at all times—not simply upon occasion. All the money in the world will not bring back a single tooth that is lost out of the mouth.

Lillian Russell's Answer. Sarah: If you wish a prompt reply to your letter, I am unable to print the formulas you ask for on account of the space. But I shall be glad to send them to you upon receipt of the stamped addressed envelope.

R. F. K.: The formula for removing superfluous hair is two parts peroxide of hydrogen and one of common salt. Apply this mixture daily to the superfluous hair. This will not remove the hair, but it will prevent it from growing. It is best to use the formula daily, and to be persistent in the treatment. It is best to use the formula daily, and to be persistent in the treatment.

Mrs. H. A.: If you feel that you are becoming stouter, I would suggest a diet and exercise. These are the safest and most effective means of preventing obesity. Boiled or roasted meats are the best. Eat vegetables and fruits. Walk three to five miles daily. Nothing better for reducing than walking. It will also tend to build up the system for reducing the hips if you will send me a stamped addressed envelope.

Margaret: A good bleach will whiten your hair and give it a soft, shining effect. Do not use anything to do to your hair, but let it grow. Hair that is split will not grow, and does not get the nourishment it should. Massage your scalp with a good hair tonic. I shall gladly send you the formula for hair color and bleach for the hair. I will send you a stamped addressed envelope if you will send me a stamped addressed envelope.

A. K.: I understand from your letter you wish something that will take the curl out of your hair. I know of nothing that will take the natural curl from the hair. I am sorry I cannot help you.

Dr. Brady's Health Talks FOOD AND ENDURANCE. Doctors nowadays are exceeding fond of telling patients they eat too much. Our patients are apt to smile and wonder how much the doctor eats. They sometimes doubt the doctor's sincerity when they have occasion to observe his internal capacity for good things. But doctors are not expected to take their own medicine. Imagine a doctor trying to lead a regular life and sleep eight hours every night. His work would be a failure.

Mr. Horace Fletcher, the author of the ordinary diet of the American workingman, is about the best authority on this subject. He has shown that a man of fifty-eight years living on a diet which contains about half the protein of our ordinary daily ration, has greater endurance than the best athlete in the height of his training.

What Fletcher Did to Yale. In 1897 Mr. Fletcher, a physical teacher in the Yale gymnasium, began at the time that he was in any case of the Yale gymnasium. He had 200 pounds 200 times without reaching the limit of his endurance, and the result of his training was that he showed an average of 274 lifts. He had 200 pounds 200 times without reaching the limit of his endurance, and the result of his training was that he showed an average of 274 lifts.

At the completion of only 175 lifts, Mr. Fletcher was as fresh as a rose. In other words, he was able to continue his training without any loss of energy. He was able to continue his training without any loss of energy. He was able to continue his training without any loss of energy.

He had escaped by balloon from the besieged city, and the peroration of his first speech at Tours gave the keynote of his policy. "If we cannot make a compact with the enemy, we will make a compact with death. We will make a compact with death. We will make a compact with death."

The Republic demands the co-operation of all. It will utilize the courage of all its citizens, according to the capacities of each, and according to its traditional policy, will make young men its chiefs. Heaven itself will cease to favor our enemies. In autumn rains will come and held in check by the capital far from their homes and troubled and anxious for the future, the Prussians will be decimated one by one by our arms, by hunger and by nature. No it is not possible that the genius of France will be forever obscured. It cannot be that a great nation shall be its place in the world be taken from it by an invasion of 500,000 men. Up, my men, and let us die rather than suffer the shame of dismemberment."

Gambetta's principal helper in this work was Freycinet, and together they endeavored to raise in the short space of six weeks an army of 150,000 men which, if its training had been equal to its ardor, might have succeeded in raising the siege of Paris, or at least in inflicting a severe blow upon the invaders. There was, indeed, a moment when the siege of Paris was in danger of being raised, but the government was not prepared to meet the emergency. The government was not prepared to meet the emergency. The government was not prepared to meet the emergency.

Valuable Discovery in Complexion Beautifier. Because of its peculiar power of absorption, also because it serves every essential purpose, this mercurized wax is perhaps the most valuable cosmetic beauty preparation ever discovered in recent years. It not only covers the face, but it also cleanses it, so that she needs no toilet cream. Some use powder afterward, but this is not necessary. This rule for applying mercurized wax has been found very satisfactory. Wash the face with warm water, drying lightly. Before using the wax, do not rub it in, and keep the wax to use before retiring, allowing it to remain on all night, and using it in the morning with warm water. All drug stores sell this wax in original, one-ounce packages.

For the removal of a wrinkled or flabby skin, there is nothing better than to bathe the face in a solution made by dissolving 1 ounce powdered salicylic acid in 1 pint of water. Repeat the treatment as quickly as possible. Advertisement.
